

Contributors

Wyatt Evans earned his Ph.D. in U.S. History in 2003. He previously served in the Peace Corps, as an infantry and civil affairs officer in the U.S. Army, and as a construction project manager. An associate professor at Drew University, he directed Drew's History & Culture graduate program from 2013 to 2017 and was a member of the Council of Independent Colleges' Senior Leadership Academy in 2015/16. His publications include The Legend of John Wilkes Booth, winner of the 2005 OAH Avery O. Craven award, and "The Lincoln-Obama Moment," in Remixing the Civil War (JHUP, 2011). He is very involved with developing digital literacy programming at Drew and is currently writing a biography of Lafayette Baker, chief detective for the War Department during the Civil War.

Emily K. Gibson is a science policy analyst and historian at the National Science Foundation. She holds an M.A. in History from the University of Massachusetts Amherst and an M.S. and Ph.D. in the History and Sociology of Technology and Science from the Georgia Institute of Technology. She is currently writing a book on the National Science Foundation's 70-year history.

Daniel Immerwahr is an associate professor of history at Northwestern University, where he teaches global history and U.S. foreign relations. His first book, Thinking Small (Harvard 2015), a history of U.S. grassroots antipoverty strategies, won the Organization of American Historians' Merle Curti Award for best work of U.S. intellectual history. His second, How to Hide an Empire, a retelling of U.S. history with the overseas parts of the country included in the story, is a national bestseller. Immerwahr is currently working on two research projects: one the pop culture of U.S. global hegemony, the other a book about 19th-century urban catastrophes. Immerwahr's writings have appeared in the New York Times, Washington Post, The Guardian, Slate, The Nation, and The New Republic.

John Krige is the Regents Professor, Kranzberg Professor in the School of History and Sociology at the Georgia Institute of Technology. His research focuses on the U.S.'s use of advanced knowledge to project its power abroad in the Cold War. His monograph Sharing Knowledge, Shaping Europe: US Technological Collaboration and Nonproliferation (MIT Press, 2016) develops numerous case studies on this theme. Attempts to use export controls and other instruments to share or deny knowledge with friend and foe are described in his edited collection, How Knowledge Moves: Writing the Transnational History of Science and Technology (University of Chicago Press, 2019). Krige has been a visiting scholar at various academic institutions and is the recipient of Caltech's Francis Bacon Award for the History and Philosophy of Science and Technology for 2019–20.

Simone Selva is currently assistant professor of Economic History at the University of Naples l'Orientale, where he instructs Master classes in the History of Globalization of Markets and in the History and Politics of Transatlantic Relations. He has researched and published extensively on the history of U.S. foreign economic policy from the end of World War II through the 1980s and on the history of international finance in the 20th century. He has held research and visiting scholar positions at the universities of Oxford, Harvard, Columbia, Bologna, New York University, the German Historical Institute in Washington, DC, the European University Institute, and the Zentrum für Zeithistorische Forschung in Potsdam. He also was Visiting Research Professor for the Mexican Government at El Colegio de Mexico in Mexico City.

Marian Smith served as the Senior Historian at the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), later U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS), from 1988 to 2018. Her work focused on the federalization of U.S. immigration policy during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. She became an expert on U.S. immigration and nationality records and actively worked within her agency's records management program to preserve official records. Marian retired in late 2018 and is enjoying a marked reduction in stress.

Kenneth C. Wenzer is an independent historian who lives in Takoma Park, MD. He holds a Ph.D. in Russian History from the Catholic University of America (1992). He has published over 40 books and articles and has been a general editor of some interdisciplinary scholarly projects.