

Contributors

Paul Adler is an assistant professor of 20th-century U.S. and World History at Colorado College. He received his Ph.D. in 2014 from Georgetown University and then taught at the Harvard University History and Literature concentration. His first book, No Globalization Without Representation: U.S. Activists and World Inequality, came out in May 2021 from the University of Pennsylvania Press.

Neil Buffett is an associate professor of History at Suffolk County Community College on Long Island. His research has focused on 20th-century social movements in New York City and on Long Island. In particular, his work highlights the contributions of high school student activists in the civil rights, environmental, and antiwar movements of the 1960s and 1970s. He has been published in the Long Island History Journal, the Journal of Urban History, and by Arcadia Press. He completed his doctoral degree in history at SUNY Stony Brook in December 2011.

Bradley Lynn Coleman is the director of the John A. Adams '71 Center for Military History & Strategic Analysis and professor of history at the Virginia Military Institute. He graduated from the Virginia Military Institute (B.A., 1995), Temple University (M.A., 1997), and University of Georgia (Ph.D., 2001). He served as command historian, U.S. Southern Command, from 2007 to 2012. He is currently writing a book on war and memory at the Virginia Military Institute during the World War II era.

Arnita A. Jones is Executive Director emerita at the American Historical Association, which she led from 1999 to 2010. Her interest in federal history began in 1977 when she was appointed by a consortium of historical groups to organize the National Coordinating Committee for the Promotion of History (NCC). Jones later managed a program at the National Endowment for the Humanities, was a consultant at History Associates Incorporated, and Executive Secretary at the Organization of American Historians from 1988 to 1999. She was a founder of both the National Council on Public History (1979) and the International Federation for Public History (2010), and has been an active member in the Society for History in the Federal Government since 1979.

Theresa Keeley is an assistant professor of the U.S. and the World at the University of Louisville. Her first book is Reagan's Gun-Toting Nuns: The Catholic Conflict over Cold War Human Rights Policy in Central America (Cornell University Press, 2020). Her work has appeared in publications including Diplomatic History, Gender & History, The Catholic Historical Review, and the Washington Post. Her teaching and research interests in human rights, religion, transnational movements, gender, and law draw on her experience as a human rights activist and attorney. She earned her JD from the University of Pennsylvania and her Ph.D. from Northwestern University.

Paul J. Polgar is a historian of slavery, race, and abolition in the United States and received his Ph.D. from the CUNY Graduate Center. He has published broadly on race, rights, and reform in the United States, including the book Standard-Bearers of Equality: America's First Abolition Movement (2019) and articles and book chapters tracing the long history of Black freedom movements such as “Whenever They Judge it Expedient’: Partisan Politics and Black Voting Rights in Early National New York” and “Fighting Lightning with Fire: Black Boston’s Battle Against the Film the Birth of a Nation.” His scholarship has been supported by the Omohundro Institute of Early American History and Culture, the Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History, the New York Historical Society, and several other organizations.

Robert Rakove received his Ph.D. in History from the University of Virginia in 2008. He is a lecturer in International Relations at Stanford University, having previously taught at Colgate University and Old Dominion University. He has also held fellowships from the Miller Center for Public Affairs, the Mershon Center for International Security Studies, and the United States Studies Centre at the University of Sydney. He is the author of Kennedy, Johnson, and the Nonaligned World, published in 2012 by Cambridge University Press and is presently at work on a history of the U.S.-Afghan relationship up to 1979.

Sean Seyer is an assistant professor at the University of Kansas, where he teaches courses on aviation history and the history of science and technology. His first book, Sovereign Skies: The Origins of American Civil Aviation Policy, was published in 2021 by Johns Hopkins University Press. His current book project focuses on the creation and proliferation of the “Air Trust” narrative in the interwar period.

Kelly J. Shannon, is associate professor of History, the Chastain-Johnston Middle Eastern Studies Distinguished Professor in Peace Studies, and the Executive Director of the Center for Peace, Justice, and Human Rights at Florida Atlantic University. She specializes in the history of U.S. foreign relations, with particular attention to the Islamic world, Iran, transnational history, women, and human rights. She is the author of U.S. Foreign Policy and Muslim Women's Human Rights (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2018). Shannon is currently working on a book about U.S. relations with Iran during the first half of the 20th century, The Ties That Bind: U.S.-Iran Relations, 1905–1953, as well as a book on the transnational history of U.S. feminism(s), American Feminism and the World since 1945: An International History.

Matthew K. Shannon is associate professor of History at Emory & Henry College. He is the author of Losing Hearts and Minds: American-Iranian Relations and International Education during the Cold War (Cornell, 2017). Dr. Shannon's research is published in Iranian Studies, Diplomatic History, International History Review, and The Sixties. He is the editor of American-Iranian Dialogues: From Constitution to White Revolution, c. 1890s–1960s (Bloomsbury, 2021), and the co-editor of 9/11 and the Academy: Responses in the Liberal Arts and the 21st Century World (Palgrave Macmillan, 2019).

Sarah B. Snyder is a professor at American University's School of International Service. She is the author of two award-winning books: From Selma to Moscow: How Human Rights Activists Transformed U.S. Foreign Policy (Columbia, 2018), and Human Rights Activism and the End of the Cold War: A Transnational History of the Helsinki Network (Cambridge, 2011).