

Contributors

Michael J. Brodhead is a historian at the Office of History, U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, in Alexandria, Virginia. He is the author of Isaac C. Parker: Federal Justice on the Frontier and other books and articles on western American exploration and Corps of Engineers history, and editor of Nothing But Praise: A History of the 1321st Engineer General Service Regiment, by Aldo H. Bagnulo. He is retired from the History Department of the University of Nevada, Reno, and has worked at the regional branch of the National Archives in Kansas City and at the Nevada State Archives.

Richard Fry is a senior lecturer in the Irvin D. Reid Honors College at Wayne State University. He teaches seminar courses on the history of American cities, with a strong emphasis on the history of Detroit, and American politics. He earned his Ph.D. in American labor history from Wayne State University in Detroit in 2010 with a dissertation titled “Fighting for Survival: Coal Miners and the Struggle over Health and Safety in the United States, 1968–1988.”

Christopher Hickman earned a Ph.D. from The George Washington University in 2010. Currently he is Visiting Assistant Professor of History at the University of North Florida in Jacksonville, Florida. His recent article “Courting the Right: Richard Nixon’s 1968 Campaign Against the Warren Court” won the Hughes-Gossett Award from the Supreme Court Historical Society.

Kevin R. Kosar has been an analyst at the Library of Congress’s Congressional Research Service since 2003. There his research portfolio includes government communications and propaganda, classified information policy, quasi governmental entities, privatization, and the U.S. Postal Service. He has testified before Congress, and he has served as a peer-reviewer for the U.S. Department of Education’s Teaching American History Grant Program and Presidential Academies for American History and Civics programs. Kosar’s writings have appeared in scholarly and professional journals, including Presidential Studies Quarterly, Public Administration Review, and Teachers College Record, and Post-al History Journal. His first book, Failing Grades: The Federal Politics of Education Standards (Lyne Rienner), was published in 2005. His most recent book is Whiskey: A Global History (Reaktion, 2010). Kosar received his Ph.D. in politics from New York University.

Mordecai Lee, a Milwaukee native, received a Ph.D. in Public Administration from Syracuse University in 1975. His first employment experiences were with the federal government, as summer intern at the U.S. Geological Survey (then located at the Interior Department building), the next summer at the Tennessee Valley Authority, and then Legislative Assistant to Rep. Henry Reuss (WI-5). Returning home, he was elected to three terms in the Wisconsin Legislature's State Assembly and two in the Senate. After voluntarily leaving politics, he joined the faculty of the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee in 1997. He teaches public administration and nonprofit management. Mordecai is author of six books, five relating to the federal government, including The First Presidential Communications Agency (2005), Institutionalizing Congress and the Presidency: The US Bureau of Efficiency (2006), and Nixon's Super-Secretaries (2010). His most recent book, Promoting the War Effort: Robert Horton and Federal Propaganda, 1938–1946, was published last year.

John Sager is a Ph.D. candidate and instructor in History at Texas Tech University. His research explores the relationship between military and society. His dissertation, entitled "The Corporate Model and U.S. Military Planning during the Cold War," examines the influence of non-military factors, such as economics, on the U.S. military, 1947–1970. His work has been supported by funding from the Marine Corps Heritage Foundation.

Raymond W. Smock is director of the Robert C. Byrd Center for Legislative Studies at Shepherd University in Shepherdstown, WV. He was historian of the U.S. House of Representatives from 1983 to 1995. He is a member of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission and is currently serving as president of the West Virginia Humanities Council. He holds the Ph.D. in American history from the University of Maryland (1974) and was co-editor of the 14-volume Booker T. Washington Papers. His most recent publications include Booker T. Washington: Black Leadership in the Age of Jim Crow (2009) and, with Roger Bruns and David Hostetter, co-editor of Congress Investigates: A Critical and Documentary History (2 vols., 2011).

David M. K. Sheinin is Professor of History at Trent University (Canada). His 2006 book, Argentina and the United States: An Alliance Contained (University of Georgia Press) was described in the Hispanic American Historical Review, by the historian Glenn J. Dorn, as "masterful." His many books and articles include two recent, short books on boxing and Argentine society, El boxeador poeta [The Boxer Poet] (Eloisa Cartonera, 2010) and El boxeador incrédulo [The Incredulous Boxer] (Eloisa Cartonera, 2011). Sheinin was elected to a term as President of the Middle Atlantic Council of Latin American Studies, held the J. Franklin Jameson Fellowship in American History (Library of Congress/American Historical Association), and in 2008 was named Edward Larocque Tinker Visiting Professor in Latin American History at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.