

Contributors

Eladio Bobadilla is an assistant professor of History and Latin American, Latino, and Caribbean Studies at the University of Kentucky. He received a Bachelor of Integrated Studies from Weber State University and a Ph.D. in History from Duke University, where he was supported by a Gilder Lehrman Scholarly Fellowship, a Mellon Fellowship for Dissertation Research in Original Sources, and a George Pozzetta Dissertation Award, among others. His first book, based on his dissertation and tentatively titled Without Borders: A History of the Immigrants' Rights Movement, will be published by the University of Illinois Press as part of the Working Class in American History series.

William F. Finan III, holds a B.S. in engineering from Cornell University and a Ph.D. in international economics from the University of Pennsylvania. He served on the staff of the Senate Finance Committee and the staff of the Under Secretary for International Trade in the Department of Commerce. Since 1999 he has lived abroad, first in Japan and more recently in France, working as an international economic consultant. He is now retired.

Amanda Frost is a professor of Law at the University of Virginia School of Law, where she writes, teaches, and litigates in the areas of constitutional, immigration, and citizenship law. Her scholarship has been cited by over a dozen federal and state courts, and she has been invited to testify on the topics of her articles before both the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. Her book, You Are Not American: Citizenship Stripping from Dred Scott to the Dreamers (2021), was named as a “New & Noteworthy” Book by the New York Times Book Review and was short-listed for the Lynton History Prize.

Adam Goodman is an associate professor of History and Latin American and Latino studies at the University of Illinois Chicago, and a 2022–23 Andrew W. Mellon Foundation Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University. The Deportation Machine was a finalist for the Los Angeles Times Book Prize in History and received the Henry Adams Book Prize from the Society for History in the Federal Government, and the PROSE Award in North American History from the Association of American Publishers.

S. Deborah Kang is associate professor of History and a member of the Karsh Institute of Democracy at the University of Virginia. Her research focuses on the historical and contemporary aspects of U.S. immigration and border policy. Her first book, The INS on the Line: Making Immigration Law on the US-Mexico Border, 1917–1954, traces the history of U.S. immigration agencies on the U.S.-Mexico border. She is currently preparing a book manuscript on the history of immigration legalization. Kang also serves as a consultant for federal public defender offices throughout the country, writing research briefs on the racial animus that informed the passage of laws criminalizing undocumented immigration.

Edward C. Keefer earned a Ph.D. from Michigan State University in 1974. For 34 years he researched and edited volumes in the U.S. Department of State's official documentary series, Foreign Relations of the United States. He edited 25 Foreign Relations volumes, many of which documented U.S. policy during the Vietnam War, and served as general editor of the Foreign Relations series from 2002 until his retirement in 2009. Thereafter he joined the Historical Office of the Secretary of Defense, which in 2017 published his volume, Harold Brown: Offsetting the Soviet Military Challenge, 1977–1981, in the Secretaries of Defense Historical Series. He has written articles and contributed to books on U.S. policy in East Asia and Southeast Asia and taught courses on 19th- and 20th-century British military and political figures for the Smithsonian Associates Program.

Lori Maguire is full professor of American Studies at the University of Reims in France, a member of the editorial board of Cold War History, and a review editor for H-Diplo. Most of her research has focused on foreign policy and war, notably on the Cold War and the interventions in Afghanistan and Iraq. She has published an analysis of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees' response to the conflict in Afghanistan as well as a comparative study of George W. Bush's and Tony Blair's justifications for the Iraq war. She is currently working on a book on the Vietnam War. She has published extensively both in French and English.

Cheryl E. Mango is the founding executive director of the National HBCU Studies Data Collection and Research Center and an assistant professor of History at Virginia State University (VSU). She founded the HBCU studies academic discipline, explained in her publication "Black College Renaissance: My Decision to Create the First HBCU History Course and 2020 Proposal for Interdisciplinary HBCU Studies Curricula En Masse" (2022). She received national recognition for creating the nation's first HBCU history course (HIST 349) at VSU. Mango attended Grambling State University (BA) and Morgan State University (Ph.D.). She interned at the White House Initiative on HBCUs as a graduate student, which led her to writing of the first comprehensive history of the office via her doctoral dissertation.

Maddalena Marinari teaches U.S. History at Gustavus Adolphus College. She has published extensively on immigration restriction and immigrant mobilization. She is the author of Unwanted: Italian and Jewish Mobilization Against Restrictive Immigration Laws, 1882–1965 (2020) and a co-editor of A Nation of Immigrants Reconsidered: U.S. Society in an Age of Restriction, 1924–1965 (2019), and Whose America? U.S. Immigration Policy Since 1980 (2023). Along with Erika Lee, she has also co-edited a special issue of the Journal of American History on the centennials of the passage of the Emergency Quota Act of 1921 and the Immigration Act of 1924. She is the president-elect of the Immigration and Ethnic History Society.

Jeremy Neely is an assistant professor of History at Missouri State University. He is the author of The Border between Them: Violence and Reconciliation on the Kansas-Missouri Line, published by University of Missouri Press in 2007. His written work also includes contributions to Bleeding Kansas, Bleeding Missouri: The Long Civil War on the Border (University Press of Kansas, 2013), Missouri Historical Review, Kansas History, and the New York Times “Disunion” series on the American Civil War. Dr. Neely has also contributed pieces about guerrilla warfare to the Kansas City Public Library’s award-winning history project, The Civil War on the Western Border, and has spoken about the Civil War in the West for several television and radio outlets.

Michael A. Olivas passed away on April 25, 2022. He was the William B. Bates Distinguished Chair in Law (Emeritus) at the University of Houston Law Center. In 2016-17, he was Interim President of the University of Houston-Downtown, at 15,000 students, the second largest baccalaureate institution in the city. He was the author of 16 books and had a weekly NPR show, “The Law of Rock and Roll,” where he reviewed legal developments in entertainment law. After almost 40 years at the University of Houston Law Center, where he taught Higher Education Law, Immigration Law, and Entertainment Law, he retired to his hometown of Santa Fe, NM, where he continued his research, consulted and served as an Expert Witness, and was working on his next book and his first novel.

Yael Schacher is deputy director for the Americas and Europe at Refugees International, a non-governmental policy organization in Washington, DC. In addition to her numerous policy and legal briefs on the subject, she is completing a book on the history of asylum and asylum advocacy in the United States. Dr. Schacher has published and has forthcoming articles on asylum in the Journal of American Ethnic History (Spring 2020) and the Journal of American History (2022). She received her Ph.D. in American Studies from Harvard University in 2016 and was a postdoctoral fellow at the Institute for Historical Studies at the University of Texas in 2017.